

Mississauga Health and Admin Building

This project was co-ordinated to bring together a variety of community services within one facility. The client group included representatives of the First Nation and Health Canada unit representatives. The facility was to accommodate three programming groups: the health component, the band administration component and services and counselling.

The building's form and layout is derived from the shape of an eagle with outstretched wings, a symbol held in high esteem amongst Native peoples. The interior planning achieves optimal accessibility and security of each program area by creating "zones". Each zone is connected by corridor space to each other and is secured by carefully positioned means of egress.
